

TEXTILE RECYCLING

Textile recycling reduces waste and protects resources.

You can help when you donate clothes in good condition or worn items to collection centers.

The fashion industry creates millions of tons of waste every year.

Recycling turns old fibers into new materials.

Manufacturers use these fibers for insulation, cleaning cloths or new textile products.

The process saves water and energy because it limits the need for new materials.

You extend the life of your clothes when you repair them, reuse them or send them to recycling.
